"The Bedford Guide is one of the most intelligently written and thoughtfully conceived textbooks I have ever used. It is a joy to use for the teacher and most important — for the student."

— Harris G. Aronson
Risk-Volley, Columbia

Once again containing everything students and instructors need for the first-year writing course, The Bedford Guide offers unparalleled advantages. For the fifth edition, each of the four coordinated books — a process-oriented rhetoric with professional and student models, a thematic reader, a research manual, and a handbook — has been carefully revised to help students think and read critically, to improve their technological literacy, and to offer more guidance for underprepared students. Each is fully developed on its own and well coordinated with the others. The result is a comprehensive learning package that allows students to buy one text that does it all.

An Ancillary Package That Simplifies Instructors' Lives

The extensive and varied ancillaries, including a new Instructor's Annotated Edition, give instructors help where it's needed most by offering the time savers and the professional resources they need to meet the challenges of today's classroom. And any ancillary — including the software — is available to adopters of any version of the book.

Shoptalk

for College Writers

by

Sheryl I. Fontaine & Cheryl Smith

ISBN 0-15-503808-7

Shoptalk is an exciting new rhetoric that introduces students to the field of composition while allowing them to write for their own purposes from a variety of sources. Shoptalk encourages students to start writing immediately as they also begin to read and reflect on the nature of language and college writing itself. By discovering why college writing works - why it exists, how it has evolved, why they are writing in classes, why college writing seems so "different," - students will have a better understanding of and more control over their written communication.

- Shoptalk is a complete rhetoric that includes readings, writing prompts and guides, response activities, and editing materials.
- Interspersed throughout the writing activities sections are demonstrations of student writing that show how different students have responded to the writing activities.
- Computers and technology are discussed in the overall context of evaluating and citing information, allowing instructors to use these topics to extend and illustrate issues already being raised. By reading about computers in this manner, students will come to understand technology as part of a process in which they already engage rather than as a separate or ancillary feature.
