Our best-selling composition books are now available in an online format at about half the price of the print texts. With an e-handbook, the advice and guidance students need is only a click away when they are writing their papers. Students can bookmark the sections they use most often, highlight specific passages, and print any material they might need when not online. Instructors can add their own content to the e-book, including examples and class guidelines, to share with their students. This flexible format makes our e-handbooks the ideal writing and reference companions.
Because composition is still a teaching subject.

Joseph Harris

Rewriting
How To Do Things With Texts

ISBN 978-0-87421-642-7
148 pages, 6X9

What are the moves that an academic writer makes? How does writing as an intellectual change the way we work from sources? With Rewriting, Joe Harris draws the college writing student away from static ideas of thesis, support, and structure, and toward a more mature and dynamic understanding. Harris wants college writers to think of intellectual writing as an adaptive and social activity, and he offers them a clear set of strategies.

This book is a tour de force, a means of teaching and modeling the wise and effective use of sources. Beyond that, it's gracefully written, the textual examples offer wonderful variety, and the ethical center is humane, respectful, and warm.

Carol Rutz

Harris models the working intellectual--not apologetic about his taste for books and thinking, happy to admit that these things are not so much glamorous or righteous as satisfying, hard, and do-able by anyone with ambition to be interested and interesting.

Eli Goldblatt

I like this book. It has pulse. And it fills a gap between bulky reader/rhetorics and dutiful style handbooks.
